Governor Vardaman, who made the first response to the address of welcome, was received with prolonged applause. He stated his idea to be that a absolute control of all seaports should be vested in the federal government. "But I am unwilling," said the Governor, "to surrender to the federal government in times of endemic, or any other time, the control of the affairs of Mississippi, I believe in the good old Democratic decrine that the powers of government have their source in the consent of the governed. The tendancy of the times is trine that the powers of government have their source in the consent of the governed. The tendency of the times is toward the concentration of authority at Washinston. The respect for the pride and independence and nower of private citizenship is retrogradine. Dr. DuBore addressed the Conference on the work and results of the labors of the Epworth League. Dr. DuBose, who is physically a perfect specimen of a man, and intellectually a giant, made the best speech so far of the session. He held the attention of the Conference as no other speaker has up to now heid, and he created more upwort than any other speaker. Dr. DuBose like some other natives of Georgia, is an excellent story teller. His speech was full of excellent story teller. His speech was full of excellent stories, most of them in splendid negro dialect, and every one of them illustrated what they were intended to illustrate, and ditted to a T.

NEW YORK, November 9.—After seeking in religion comfort for a broken heart, Miss Beatrice Russell, daughter of Henry E. Russell, a wealthy retired manufacturer of New London, Conn., committed suicide yesterday by drinking poison. Her body was found in her room by a nurse maid employed to take charge of the girl's mother, Mrs. Russell, who has been an invalid for years.

Just what romance caused the young woman to end her life is not known to the public. She was twenty-three years old, attractive, had plonty of money, and a very happy home. Her father idolized her and gave her every luxury that money could buy. A short time ago Miss Russell began to lose interest in the social life of New London, where she was widely known. She declined many invitations, always giving as her excuse that her mother was very ill and needed her care. It was quietly rumored that she had fallen in love with some one who had not returned her devotion.

At first she sought comfort in religion. She became a devout member of the church, attended every service, and volunteered on various committees.

Yesterday Miss Russell attended to her usual duties calmly and quietly. She drank the poison after writing a letter to her father, in which she told him of the reason for her death. This letter is said to have caused a profound sensation in the family.
